Searching for solutions as heroin epidemic hits hard

Opiates. The crisis has legislators considering decriminalization and state-run methadone clinics.

The Bay State is being forced to a crossroads at needlepoint.

The heroin plague has legislators, law enforcement, activists and the afflicted scrambling to come up with a solution. It has unabashedly liberal Massachusetts Sen. Ed Markey and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, a conservative Kentucky Republican, teamed up to take on the scourge. These lawmakers are often opposed politically, but agree the problem needs urgent attention.

Locally, Governor's Councilor Robert Jubinville, a criminal defense attorney from Milton, asked Gov. Charlie Baker to consider expanding his task force efforts in decriminalizing heroin use and have the state take over methadone clinics as a means to "try something different."

"Hopefully, this can start the conversation and start helping some of these kids instead of running them through the courts and ruining their lives," Jubinville told SHNS.

In his letter, Jubinville said addiction is a disease that should be treated, not punished. He applauded Gloucester Police Chief Leonard Campanello's program that began in June which stops arresting addicts who show up to the police station to turn in their drugs/paraphernalia and ask for help. As of mid-July, a little over two weeks into the program, 55 people were placed into treatment programs.

The situation is worse than previously reported. The Department of Public Health initially said that 1,008 lives were lost to prescription drugs and heroin in 2014. However, that number was last week adjusted to 1,256. That's a 57 percent leap from 2012 and a 15 percent jump from 2013. In the first three months of 2015, there were 312 deaths, about the same pace as last year.

The view of the battlefield from a desk on Beacon or Capitol Hill is vastly different from the frontline street soldier's perspective.

Growing up in Somerville, Mark McLaughlin, a street outreach worker for Bridge Over Troubled Waters, has seen the vicious impacts of opiates from jump street.

"I'm glad to see the attention this is getting now, but people are acting like this is a new problem," McClaughlin said. "You'd see heroin use in certain communities, and then the rise of Oxycontin in the late 1990s and 2000s. But that was written off as scumbags and homeless folks using."

Once usage spread out of notoriously rough neighborhoods, the stigma began to morph.

"People used to think that only stickup kids and punks in Southie, Charlestown, Brockton, Quincy, Somerville and all the areas with hard reputations were involved in this stuff," McLaughlin said. "At the time, you wanted to scream, 'You think these things are going to stay in the Bunker Hill Projects? You think they're going to stay in the Old Colony Projects? You're kidding yourself.'"

He said the expansion of NARCAN, the life-saving opiate blocker, was the result of mothers begging for help.

"The epidemic had to puncture the middle class in order to get things going," McLaughlin said. "All the sudden, the conversation became, 'This is Duxbury, not Roxbury. We need to do something to protect our kids.'"

As legislators grapple with the crisis, McLaughlin is out in the van on the Common and in Harvard Square handing out clean needles or bleach kits to clean the spike to folks who are going ride the horse regardless to the cleanliness of their shooter. Once he and his fellow workers earn the trust of the afflicted, they gently push folks to get help.

"I'm just worried that by the time we get a handle on this heroin problem, we'll have a meth problem to deal with next," McLaughlin said.

Mystery. New details emerge in behind-the-scenes Baby Doe story

Investigators this week still knew very little about the young girl, dubbed Baby Doe, found dead on Deer Island in June.

Cops were still chasing leads about the girl, described as about 4 years old with brown hair, brown eyes and pierced ears, 3 feet tall and weighing about 30 pounds. Who she was and how she died remain mysteries.

New details on the frustrating investigation emerged on Sunday in a report from The Boston Globe. Here is some of what we learned in the story, published under a byline from reporters Laura Crimaldi and Evan Allen:

Pollen tests suggest she lived near Boston. An analysis of Baby Doe's clothing found pollen from plants that grow in the area. The results have led investigators to believe she lived here. It also boosted the importance of local tips.

The investigator's office kept a haunting showcase of dead-end leads. Boston Police Trooper Daniel Herman kept pictures tacked to the wall of young girls who tipsters believed might be Baby Doe. Every time, the girls have been found unharmed. There has been an unimaginable mix of emotions surrounding the investigation.

Also, a week into the investigation, police followed a tip from a witness who said they saw someone heave a trash bag into the water a few days before the discovery of Baby Doe's body. It turned out the bag had been filled with rotting fruit.

Dentists were tapped as police followed a lead about a dental filling. Investigators called dentists from all over, asking them to search dental records for young girls with the same filling found inside Baby Doe's mouth. The filling lead was later deemed a mistake.

The public is urged to provide tips anonymously by texting GIRL to 67283 or calling 617-369-5655.

Cop car vandals post video online; face gun, rape raps

Lawrence. Three nabbed for vandalizing cop cars; one found with girl, 14, in his bed, police say.

Evidence / PROVIDED

Aspiring criminals of the commonwealth, pay attention: If you find yourself tempted to break into a police station parking lot and cause thousands of dollars in damage to cruisers, the primary goal is to not get caught.

Part of avoiding capture involves not posting a video of you and your friends breaking the law online. Also, don't open the door with a loaded handgun when the police come knocking.

According to the Massachusetts State Police blog, three people hopped the fence into the rear parking lot of the Lawrence police station and started jumping and wailing on two Ford Explorer cruisers on Friday night.

The report said that they racked up thousands of dollars in damage in this bold effort to show disdain for law enforcement. The next brazen move was to film this excursion and post it online. Police said they identified one man who appeared to be holding a Taser and another using naughty words to express his feelings toward police.

But this strategy did not work well for the suspects in question. It did not take long for authorities to identify the three suspects and getting a warrant for their arrests was no tall task.

Lawrence police called up the Massachusetts State Police Violent Fugitive Apprehension Section, and the hunt was on.

On Saturday morning, the two law enforcement teams rolled up on an apartment on Thornton Street in Lawrence and arrested Efrain Molina, 24, and Juan Ayala, 22.

Next, the teams went down to Haverhill Street, where they knocked on Jhesy Rodriquez's door. Police say Rodriguez, 19, greeted the officers with a .357 Magnum revolver cocked and ready to go. They were able to take Rodriquez down before he could squeeze off a shot. Officers searched the house and found a 14-year-old girl in his bed.

All three suspects were charged with witness intimidation and malicious destruction of property.

Officers said they searched Rodriquez's place and found a sawed-off 12-gauge shotgun, a .45-caliber handgun, ammunition, large amounts of cash, a scale and a large amount of marijuana.

He was charged with several weapons counts as well as rape and drug possession.

State of emergency set in Ferguson after shooting anniversary violence

Sunday. The violence was in marked contrast to a day of mostly subdued, peaceful commemorations.

Authorities declared a state of emergency in Ferguson, Missouri, after gunfire erupted on the anniversary of a high-profile police shooting, and prosecutors on Monday charged an 18-year-old man with assault on officers.

The man, Tyrone Harris, was critically wounded in an exchange of gunfire with police on Sunday night as people marked the shooting death one year ago of unarmed black man Michael Brown by a white officer in Ferguson, a suburb of St. Louis.

Police said Harris was being treated in the hospital. They said St. Louis County prosecutors charged Harris, whose bond was set at $250,000, on four counts including "assault on law enforcement" and shooting at a motor vehicle.

The violence, which also included a drive-by shooting and police being pelted with objects, prompted St. Louis County to declare a state of emergency.

"In light of [Sunday's] violence and unrest in the city of Ferguson, and the potential for harm to persons and property, I am exercising my authority as county executive to issue a state of emergency, effective immediately," County Executive Steve Stenger said in a statement.

On a day of civil disobedience called by activists in Missouri on Monday, several people were arrested after jumping barricades at a courthouse in St. Louis, news video reports showed.

Clergy and civil rights groups led the rally of more than 100 people through city streets, shouting, "This is what democracy looks like," and, "Black lives matter."

On Sunday night in Ferguson, volleys of gunshots rang out as police in riot gear tried to disperse demonstrators blocking traffic and smashing storefront windows along a street that was a flash point for riots last year after Brown, 18, was shot dead.

Missouri Gov. Jay Nixon called Sunday's violence "a sad turn of events" carried out by a criminal element

Nixon, who had deployed the National Guard to quell violence last year, did not make any mention of additional security for rallies on Monday planned in and around Ferguson.

The death of Brown and a grand jury's decision to spare the white officer from criminal charges led to a wave of demonstrations that boiled over into rioting and arson at times and spawned sympathy rallies across the country.

Brown's death also prompted greater scrutiny of racial bias within the U.S. criminal justice system, giving rise to the "Black Lives Matter" movement that gained momentum from other high-profile killings of unarmed minorities by white police in cities such as New York, Baltimore, Los Angeles, Cincinnati and most recently Arlington, Texas. Family calls off private search for Florida teens lost at sea

The families of two 14-year-old boys from South Florida have ended a private search for the teens who disappeared last month on a boating trip in the Atlantic Ocean, local media reported.

The families of Austin Stephanos and Perry Cohen said in a statement on Sunday that their "hope becomes a prayer — that one day Perry and Austin will be returned to us," the Palm Beach Post and other news outlets reported.

The families had continued privately funded efforts after the U.S. Coast Guard ended its search a week after the boys disappeared on July 24.

The boys, who were fishing buddies and neighbors, were last seen buying fuel for their 19-foot, single-engine vessel.

Their overturned boat was found two days later, about 180 miles north of Jupiter, Florida, where they had launched it.

The Coast Guard's search had spanned nearly 50,000 square nautical miles up to North Carolina. REUTERS

Grizzly suspected in death of hiker may be killed

A mother grizzly suspected in the death of a hiker whose partially eaten body was found at Yellowstone National Park in Wyoming has been trapped and will be killed if DNA testing proves she was involved in the attack, the park's superintendent said.

An autopsy on the hiker, Lance Crosby, 63, was planned Monday to determine the cause of his death.

Crosby, who was from Montana, was reported missing after failing to show up for work Friday morning, and later that day, a ranger found his body in a popular backcountry area off a trail near Yellowstone Lake. REUTERS

Chicago Public Schools to lay off 1,500 teachers and staff

Chicago Public Schools on Monday began notifying nearly 1,500 teachers and support staff who are being fired amid a previously announced $200 million budget cut and a shift in student enrollment.

The announcement came as CPS released its $5.7 billion 2016 budget, which includes a historic $1.1 billion budget deficit driven by rapidly rising pension payments.

The layoff notices will affect 479 teachers and 1,012 other staff members, out of more than 41,500 employees, according to the Chicago public school system. REUTERS

Houston. Texas man accused of killing eight could face death penalty

The Texas man accused of killing eight people, including his son and an ex-girlfriend, during the weekend in a Houston-area home was formally charged on Monday with three counts of capital murder, a crime punishable with the death penalty.

David Conley, who has a long history of violent crimes, was ordered held without bond.

District Attorney Devon Anderson said her staff will take three to four months to decide whether to seek the death penalty for Conley but added, "At this point, it's a no-brainer."

Conley, 48, wearing a yellow Harris County Jail uniform and with his hands cuffed in front of him for his court appearance, quietly answered "yes" when asked to confirm his identity at a hearing.

Assistant District Attorney Alycia Harvey said Conley, who does not yet have an attorney, has made a statement to authorities about his relationship to the victims, who included two adults and six children between the ages of 6 and 13.

She said the dead included Conley's son, Nathaniel Conley, 13, and the boy's mother, Valerie Jackson. Conley was outraged that Jackson had changed the locks on her home, preventing him from getting inside, prosecutors said.

Conley slipped into the home through a window, tied up eight people — Jackson, her husband, and the six children — and shot them all in the head, according to the indictment.

After a standoff with sheriff's deputies who went to the house after a relative of one of the victims asked for a check on the family's welfare, the suspect opened fire on officers when they entered the home.

In addition to Nathaniel Conley, authorities identified the slain children as Honesty Jackson, 11, Dwayne Jackson, 10, Caleb Jackson, 9, Trinity Jackson, 7, and Jonah Jackson, 6. REUTERS

US consulate target in wave of attacks on Turkish security

Two women shot at the U.S. Consulate in Istanbul on Monday, and at least nine people were killed in a wave of separate attacks on Turkish security forces, weeks after Ankara launched a crackdown on Islamic State, Kurdish and far-left militants.

The NATO member has been in a heightened state of alert since starting its "synchronized war on terror" last month, including air strikes against Islamic State fighters in Syria and Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK) militants in northern Iraq. It has also rounded up hundreds of suspected militants at home.

A far-left group that killed a Turkish security guard in a 2013 suicide bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Ankara claimed it was involved in Monday's attack.

The Revolutionary People's Liberation Party-Front (DHKP-C), considered a terrorist organization by the United States and Turkey, said one of its members was involved and called Washington the "arch-enemy" of the people of the Middle East and the world.

Turkey's foreign ministry condemned the attack and said security at U.S. diplomatic missions was being tightened. Police with automatic rifles cordoned off streets around the U.S. Consulate in the Sariyer district on the European side of Istanbul. REUTERS

Long walk. Cosmonauts embark on six-hour spacewalk outside ISS

A pair of Russian cosmonauts began their workweek on Monday by cleaning the windows of the International Space Station (ISS), floating more than 200 miles above the earth's surface.

Station commander Gennady Padalka and flight engineer Mikhail Kornienko left the station's Pirs module at 1420 GMT, embarking on a six-hour spacewalk to install new equipment and carry out maintenance tasks.

The cosmonauts quickly completed their first task, installing equipment to help crew members maneuver outside the ISS, before cleaning a porthole window to remove years of dirt left by exhaust fumes from visiting ships.

"They developed a [cleaning] tool kit with two swabs with handles on them. The swabs are kind of a type of terry cloth," spacewalk specialist Devan Bolch said in a NASA video published before the walk.

"It's kind of similar to what you would use on your car headlights when they get hazy to clean them."

1 Let the Nicki Minaj pregnancy rumors begin!

Meek Mill is probably happy that his name is coming up for some reason other than constantly feuding with Drake. So what's distracting everyone from that spat now? Oh, just Nicki Minaj introducing him at a recent Burgettstown, Pennsylvania, concert as "my baby father," immediately setting off waves of speculation that Minaj is in fact pregnant — and apparently a fan of mangling popular phrases. (Seriously, "baby father"? That just sounds awkward.) As to whether there's any truth to the baby talk, Minaj is being less than helpful, retweeting fan reactions to the rumor with just a series of crying-laughing (or maybe just crying) emojis. That could really mean a number of things. This is why people shouldn't release statements comprised entirely of emojis. It's an imperfect communication system, people.

2 Let's check in with Gavin Rossdale's former lover

Gavin Rossdale may be on the outs with soon-to-be ex-wife Gwen Stefani, but at least one former flame is eager to hear from him: Peter Robinson, otherwise known as cross-dressing pop star Marilyn, who claims he and Rossdale dated in the 1980s. "He was the love of my life. I'm f—ing proud of that," Robinson tells Radar Online. "I want to say I would take him back in a heartbeat, but the reality goes, 'What is going on with you?' I've been celibate for 25 years. The next person I engage with I want to be adored and loved and not ashamed about who I am. I don't think we'll ever be friends and that upsets me because I really love him."

3 Emma Watson and the silent breakup

You know who is feeling up to discussing her personal life? Emma Watson, who tells Vogue U.K. that last year she went through a "horrendous" breakup with ex-boyfriend Matt Janney. How horrendous are we talking? It involved a vow of silence. No, seriously. "I felt really uncomfortable," Watson says. "Even before my relationship ended, I went on a silent retreat because I really wanted to figure out how to be at home with myself." There's some joke in here about relationships and communication issues, but I'm honestly more distracted by the fact that silent retreats are apparently a thing.

Chris Farley as Shrek

A bit of Hollywood history: Chris Farley was originally supposed to voice the grumpy, titular ogre in "Shrek," and he even recorded as much as 90 percent of the film's dialogue before he died of a drug overdose 18 years ago. Fellow "SNL" alum Mike Myers famously stepped in, and the rest is computer animated history. But now we can hear how Farley's version of the character would have sounded. The biggest difference? Totally not Scottish, which just feels weird, right? And if you listen closely to this temp track, you can hear Tom Waits' "Innocent When You Dream" start up at the end. How come that didn't make it into the film?

FKA Twigs still hasn't seen 'Twilight'

Robert Pattinson's fiancée, singer FKA Twigs, sounds like a real delight to interview. An intrepid Sunday Times reporter did her darndest to get through a chat with Twigs, but it doesn't sound like it went very well — especially when the topic of marriage comes up. "Who told you I was getting married? You might read somewhere that I'm a monkey, and it doesn't mean I am," Twigs says, adding that she's "not prepared to talk about my private life. I don't really understand the fascination." That's all well and good, but she also starts the interview in tears and ends it with, "I think this could be my last interview. I can't do it. It makes me feel nutty."

The highlight, though, is when she admits she hasn't seen "Twilight," the film that made Pattinson a star. Actually, knowing how uncomfortable Pattinson is with the whole fame thing, maybe her not watching "Twilight" is a major turn-on for him. "It's so bad to be basic," she explains. "I don't have an average day. I hate that kind of thing."

Gillian Flynn goes Hollywood

Books. The "Gone Girl" author sees another novel, "Dark Places," hit the big screen.

It may sound crazy, given Gillian Flynn's success with novels that portray darkly complicated female main characters, but that type of story — about that kind of woman — was something of a tough sell early on.

"When I first started writing my first book, 'Sharp Objects,' I was writing it with a little sense of a vacuum of interesting female characters — in particular female antiheroes," Flynn says. "We got turned down by quite a few places that said, 'Women aren't going to read about a woman they don't like. And men will definitely not want to read about a woman who's bad.' And to me, I was like, 'What era is this?'"

Those publishers are likely kicking themselves now, since Flynn followed up "Sharp Objects" with the novels "Dark Places" and "Gone Girl," the best-seller that became a hit film from David Fincher, starring Ben Affleck and Rosamund Pike, with a script adaptation by Flynn herself. And now "Dark Places" has hit theaters, starring Charlize Theron as a troubled woman revisiting the horrific murder of her family when she was a child.

Given the success of "Gone Girl" and now that "Dark Places" is out in the world, it would be understandable if Flynn started planning out her future works of fiction with an eye toward how they might do as movies. But she swears she hasn't.

"I don't think so, but I have not started the next book — don't tell my publisher, that's off the record," she jokes. But kidding aside, it's not an approach she'd advise for herself or other writers, as the results can be not so impressive. "I think writing a book with film in mind is a way to write a really bad book. You can usually tell those books are sort of packaged to become films," she says.

Which is not to say her recent forays into Hollywood won't have some sway on her creative process going forward, of course. "I think that will be one of those things, one of those voices on my shoulder — shoulders? Now I've confessed too much! — that I'll be kind of battling a little bit with the next book, trying to fight that urge to make it seem commercial or filmable or whatever it is," Flynn admits. "Because, you know, you don't necessarily read 'Dark Places' and think, 'What an easy thing to film!'"

Charlize Theron brings Flynn's creation to life in "Dark Places." / A24 FILMS

One more thing

Trying — and failing — to lighten up

When Gillian Flynn sat down to write "Dark Places," she really, truly tried to center the story on a less troubled female protagonist, but that just wasn't in the cards. "In the first draft, I was like, 'I'm not going to write another dark female narrator.' And the Libby I created was just ridiculous," Flynn explains. "She was more, 'We're going to solve this murder! Let's go!' Really optimistic. Like a Jazzercise instructor. Ludicrous. So I just erased her and started over again, with the opening line of the book: 'I have a meanness inside of me.' Then I really had her."

Comic book. How to find the perfect 'Supergirl'

Playing a nearly invincible superhero might sound like a big task to take on, but Melissa Benoist, who suits up in the title role on CBS' new "Supergirl," felt up to the challenge.

"I think the second that I saw in my email, 'Supergirl,' I just knew that it was something exciting and rare that I wanted to be part of," said Benoist, speaking at the panel for the show at the Television Critics Association press tour.

"Melissa was the very first person we saw for Kara [Supergirl]. As soon as we saw her, we just knew she was the one. She had the strength, the hope, the heart, the humor," explained Andrew Kreisberg, one of the show's executive producers.

But Benoist's Supergirl isn't totally unstoppable. "It was important for us, especially to have a weekly TV show, to put her in situations where she isn't all powerful, so you can root for her," said Kreisberg. "You want to feel like Supergirl might not survive any of these things."

The boys take a back seat in "Supergirl" — don't expect to see Superman saving the day. / DARREN MICHAELS, CBS

Taking on a character with decades of history in comic books means there's quite a lot of backstory to draw from, and Benoist said there were a few things she tried to keep in mind in taking on the part. "I just knew that she's such a beacon of hope, and I knew that her bravery and strength were so intrinsic to who she is, and I needed to feel that myself in order to play that."

Don't expect Supergirl's cousin Clark Kent to be popping up, however. "He will be a factor in her life, but you won't see him exactly onscreen. He's going to be more in the background. But he does play a part in her evolution of becoming a superhero," said Geoff Johns, chief creative officer at DC Entertainment.

Co-star Calista Flockhart, who plays Kat, Kara's "Devil Wears Prada"-type boss, did have one good idea about how to get him on the show.

"I think it would be a really good idea if Kat becomes romantically involved with Superman," Flockhart suggested.

Time to get 'Kinky'

Interview. Kyle Taylor Parker went from ensemble to star — drag queen Lola — in the Tony-winning musical.

"Kinky Boots" is at the Boston Opera House tonight through Aug. 30. Tickets are $40-$200 at www.ticketmaster.com. / MATTHEW MURPHY

The Cyndi Lauper-scored "Kinky Boots" tells the story of our hero, Charlie, taking over his father's struggling shoe factory in England. Just when he starts to feel overwhelmed by the responsibility of turning the place around, Charlie crosses paths with drag queen Lola. Despite their different backgrounds, the two find common ground to help keep the company going.

Lola is played by Kyle Taylor Parker, who worked his way up to headliner after beginning in the musical's ensemble. We talked to Parker about meeting Lauper and stepping into Lola's very tall boots.

What do you like about Cyndi Lauper's writing style?
Cyndi is a genius. Her writing is fun, it's soulful, and it has so much heart. Each character's song is written as though the character had written the song. No song is the same.

Were you starstruck when you first met her?
I was completely starstruck — that's rock 'n' roll royalty! And in the rehearsal process, having her work with me on "Hold Me in Your Heart" — she was singing the song to me. That was the day I was trying to like keep it together, you know, get the note that she was trying to give me, but there was a part of me that was like, "Cyndi Lauper is singing to me!"

There's a larger message about acceptance in the show. Does Lola struggle with self-acceptance?
I think Lola learns to accept herself. She accepts the conditions of her life. She accepts that her relationship with her father wasn't perfect. But she's not a prisoner to it. And doing that, she's able to get the life she wants.

But on the outside, Lola appears so confident.
We're all human, right? So everyone has their insecurities, even [people] who seem brave and strong and confident. Lola is a character who has found a place in this world to exist, on her own, away from people who may not understand her. … When she is asked to [get] out of her comfort zone, that's when you begin to see a few insecurities, and you see that maybe this person has not completely accepted herself and has a bit of unfinished business with the past.

Favorites

Best moments

Do you have a favorite number in the show?
I love "The Land of Lola Reprise." It's so much fun. I get to improv a bit. I get to act like Beyonce and talk to the audience, all in one scene.

Most importantly, which is your favorite pair of Lola's boots?
The red sparkly pair at the end, definitely.

Lena Dunham's coach will get you hooked on running

The actress learned to love it, and you can too. The Mile High Run Club's Matt Wilpers share his tips.

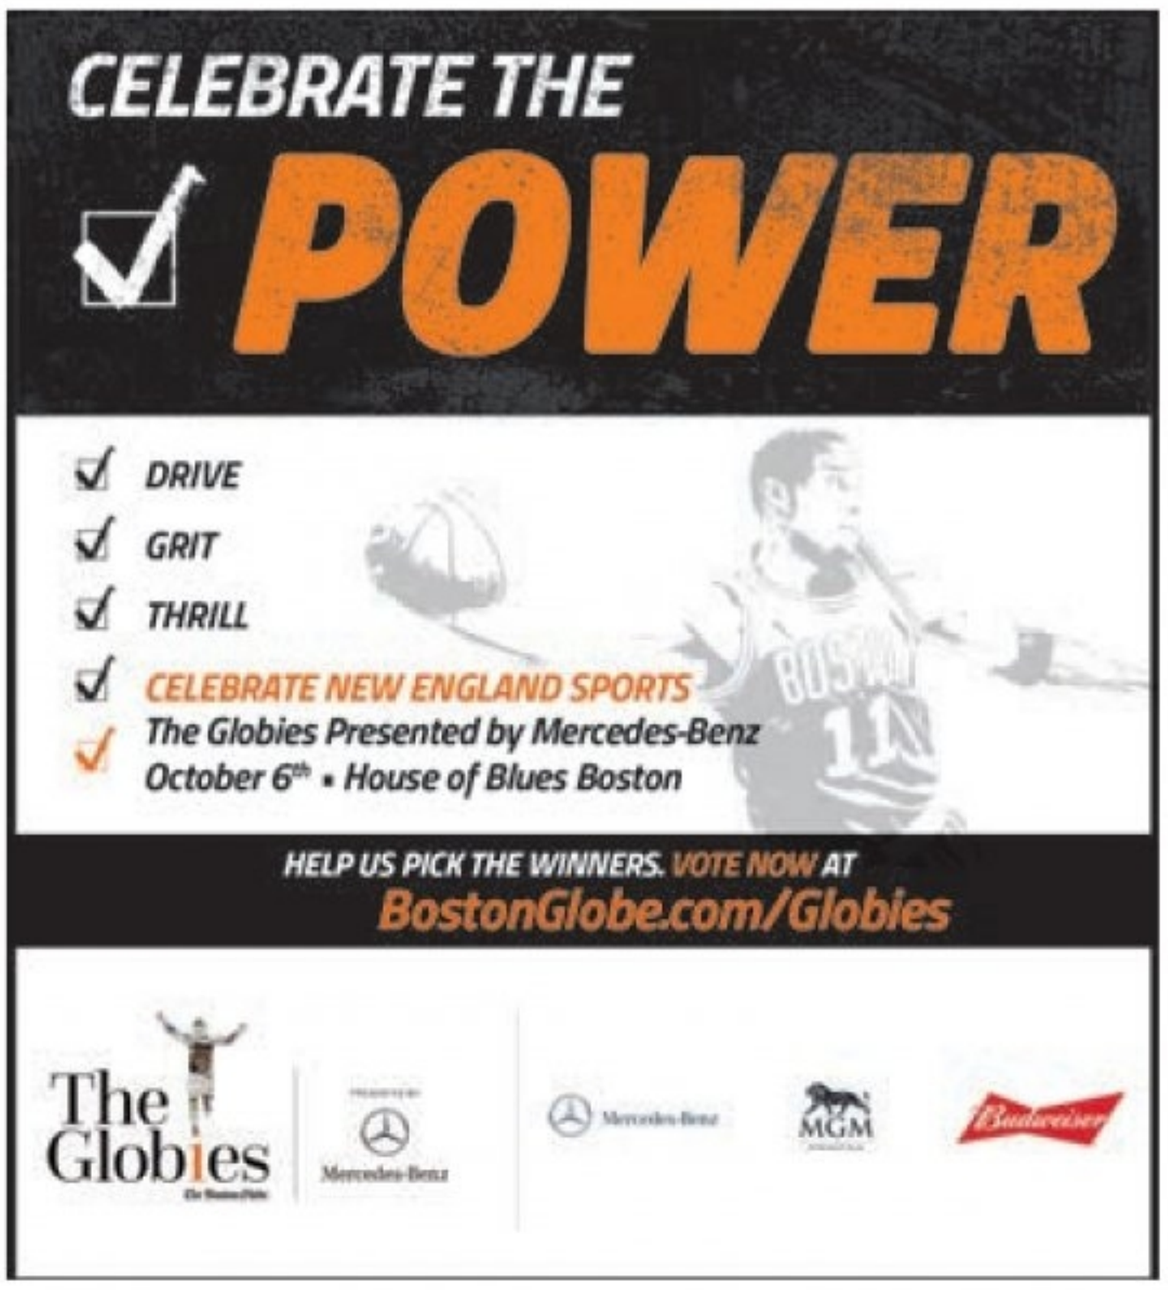
MAKE HEALTHY YOUR NEW HAPPY



Lena Dunham's character on "Girls" is going to take up running in the next season, too.
GETTY IMAGES

If you think you'll never be one of those people who runs five miles before work or trains for a marathon, don't write yourself off so fast. Lena Dunham recently confessed she hated running her whole life — until she started training with Matt Wilpers of the Mile High Run Club. "Working with Lena was an awesome experience for me," Wilpers tells us. "I helped transform her attitude about fitness by helping her build confidence." Here, he shares how you can start enjoying it, too.

Set specific and measurable goals

If you aren't one of those people who just naturally loves to run, you need a reason to do it, or it can seem a bit pointless. "Some people [set a goal] to work up to their first race, such as a 5K," Wilpers says. "Other people, like my dad, start running to improve their overall health. I think it's really important to set specific and measurable goals so you can track your progress and feel a sense of accomplishment as you progress," Wilpers says. Once you start doing that, you'll be motivated to keep running.

Switch it up

If you think running is boring, try it in a new way. Wilpers says he grew up running the mountain biking trails in his hometown. While that may be hard to do in an urban area, cities boast amazing skyline views. Never underestimate the power of beautiful scenery to make you look forward to a run. Another new way to challenge yourself: Take a treadmill class. "I love coaching treadmill classes," Wilpers says. "People who come in can expect a well thought-out workout with motivating and experienced coaches and participants of all fitness levels."

Come up with a motto

Wilpers says he has lots of mottos that he lives by, but his favorite is "sharp body, sharp mind." A running motto can keep you going and also can bleed into other areas of your life. "As long as I maintain my fitness, I think clearly and make better decisions," Wilpers says.

Do it with a friend

Making friend-dates for a run and indulging in a post-workout smoothie gives you something to look forward to, with the bonus of holding yourself accountable to actually work out. "Before you start running with a friend, set expectations about the run so you can accomplish your goals," Wilpers says.

Aries Deal with troublesome issues by making positive changes to your living arrangements. This will help dissipate any tension.

Taurus Forget about sticking to your schedule today. Social activities will relieve your stress. Get out and enjoy time spent with friends.

Gemini Try not to overreact to matters that you can't change. Take a moment to reflect on all the positive aspects and situations in your life.

Cancer Before you place blame, look at the reasons for your own behavior. Unless you have the facts, you will make an inaccurate judgment.

Leo As you learn and grow spiritually, your plans for the future will take on a new direction. Look ahead with optimism, not anxiety.

Virgo Take off your rose-colored glasses if you plan to renew a previous relationship. By romanticizing the past, you risk making the same mistake.

Libra Someone will not like the choices you make today, but you are better off looking out for yourself first. Refuse excessive demands.

Scorpio Rely on your skill, experience and intuition. You have what it takes to get ahead, so ignore anyone who tries to hold you back.

Sagittarius Your words and actions will have a strong influence on others. Rely on tact and self-control in your dealings to avoid a mishap.

Capricorn Cut ties with the people who have been causing you anxiety. You have to direct your energy into independent pursuits.

Aquarius Consider taking on extra work or looking for a better-paying job. A positive change is brewing, so take the initiative.

Pisces Don't forget about people who have always stood by you in the past. Show those who count what they mean to you by sharing your feelings . EUGENIA LAST

New blood

Patriots sign Lindley

With Tom Brady's ongoing status unknown for the Pats' season opener against the Steelers, New England needed to have a solid No. 3 quarterback behind Jimmy Garoppolo. With Matt Flynn unable to make it onto the field (due to lingering injurines), the Patriots inked former Cardinals QB Ryan Lindley Monday. "I know he worked hard; it was frustrating he couldn't get out there, [that] we couldn't see him out there," Bill Belichick said.

THE SPEEDY DEMISE OF HULKAMANIA, THE 49ERS

Brooke Hogan, left, came to her father's defense last week. / GETTY IMAGES

When Hulk Hogan was in the ring wrestling, one could easily confuse him with a hot dog, given his skin tone. But he probably smelled like bologna. In fact, most white people smell like bologna, according to Brooke Hogan's black friends.

"I feel bad for my dad, but I also feel bad for the African-American fans and stuff because they don't know that he didn't mean it," Brooke told Entertainment Tonight as she discussed her father's racist comments that got him fired from the WWE in July. "You know, it would be offensive.

"But this is something that we have to put a stop to every day — because I'll be honest with you, I've had a black guy call me a 'honky,' and I've also been told that white people smell like bologna. I don't take offense to it. I just laughed at it."

In Brooke's defense, she's not the first one to bring attention to the broad claim that white folk smell like processed meat. In a Buzzfeed post from March 2011, titled "Top 20 things white people smell like," bologna and a bologna sandwich were both prominently featured.

49ers drama

Remember the Tim Rattay-era 49ers? If you do, you were playing entirely too much "Madden" in the mid-2000s.

Rattay was under center during one of San Francisco's darkest periods as the team went 2-14 and 4-12 in 2004 and 2005, respectively. But a "Tim Rattay Day" might be in order this season at Levi's Stadium as the Niners are the early favorites to own the worst record in the league.

The disaster of an offseason was underscored this past week with rumors that Kaepernick has been spending time with Hot 97 and MTV host Nessa. Nessa and Aldon Smith were an item earlier this year.

Pimp chat

Porn star Lisa Ann is an unabashed jock-sniffer. And by jock-sniffer, I mean she has sex with a ton of pro athletes.

When the retired Ann appeared on Sirius XM's Mad Dog Radio last week, she dropped something of a barrier-breaking bombshell, explaining that one young member of the reigning NBA champion Golden State Warriors wants to be her pimp.

"This is the most unique situation I've ever been in because this person pretty much said he wants to be my Master P — you know, Master Pimp — but you know, no exchange of money, of course," she said. "He wants to be my resource for anyone I want to meet. He's fine with sharing me with other people, which is just amazing."

Patriots expect more production from running backs

Will the New England Patriots focus more on the run game this year?

It would be hard not to. The Patriots threw the ball 609 times last season compared to 438 rushes.

Some games, they focused on the run more than others – like on Nov. 16 against the Colts when Jonas Gray carried the ball 37 times for 201 yards and four touchdowns.

But the fact that Gray led all Patriots running backs in rushing yards with 412 and Shane Vereen led all running backs in carries with 96 shows that the ground game wasn't exactly featured.

Of course, things changed a bit when LeGarrette Blount was released by the Steelers and jumped on with the Patriots. Blount played in five regular season games for the Pats as well as three postseason games, emerging as the lead back.

Blount was a key contributor to the Pats' Super Bowl run last season. / GETTY IMAGES

That remains the case heading into the 2015-16 season, as Blount leads a group of running backs that no longer includes Shane Vereen and Stevan Ridley, both of whom went elsewhere in free agency.

But Blount reportedly suffered a sprained MCL a few days ago in camp, putting him out for at least the majority of camp (he was already suspended for Week 1 vs. Pittsburgh). That means more opportunities for the rest of the group. Let's take a look at it.

Automatics: LeGarrette Blount, Brandon Bolden, James Develin

As previously mentioned, Blount is the leader of this unit and will get most of the carries once he's back on the field. Bolden is counted on much more in the special teams game but could have a bigger hand in the offense this season. He signed a two-year, $3.2 million contract with the Patriots over the offseason. Develin is a fullback — and a great one at that — that the Patriots love to use in the blocking game.

On the bubble: Travaris Cadet, Jonas Gray, James White

The Patriots signed Cadet to a two-year, $1.7 million contract in the offseason. The fourth-year pass-catching back was buried in New Orleans but could emerge in New England with Vereen gone. He'll have competition with White, whom the Patriots drafted in the fourth round last year as a third-down-type back. Gray has a good shot at making the team because, after Blount, there aren't really any workhorse backs on the team. Gray proved he can carry the load for a game, but he's yet to prove he can be depended on.

"We compete on a day-to-day basis," Cadet said. "We push each other. We ask each other questions. Everybody brings a different tendency to the table so something I may lack, somebody else may be great in. I can probably learn from the next guy and that reminds me from when I was in New Orleans."
